PRESS RELEASEDate: April 18, 2018

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASERE: Indian Creek Musical Art Park

Spring is in the air, awaking our senses, and soon, harmonic musical tones will resonate along Caldwell's Indian Creek with the installation of the Indian Creek Musical Art Park. Located in Caldwell's city center, the musical art park consists of sculptural and interactive outdoor percussion instruments by Freenotes Harmony Park, built to maintain soothing tones that blend subtly into the environment, encouraging participants of all ages and abilities to create beautiful sensory experiences.

The Indian Creek Musical Art Park is an addition to the revitalization of downtown Caldwell, made possible by a generous grant from Together Treasure Valley, a team of community-minded companies that support and fund meaningful projects that enhance and have lasting impact in the Treasure Valley.

"This project brings together beautiful art in a way that's interactive and educational," says Debra Leithauser, founder and partner of Together Treasure Valley and Director of Corporate Communications at Idaho Power. "Caldwell is supporting public art as well as learning, which was exciting to the Together Treasure Valley partners."

The aesthetics of the park landscape honor local geological features, with the incorporation of boulders recovered from Celebration Park in Kuna that were donated and relocated to create the retaining wall and melon gravel from Indian Creek used as park accents. The retaining wall, designed by Christopher Hawkins of The Land Group, LLC, was installed as an Eagle Scout Project by local scout, Gabriel Babbel, and assisted by members of Scout Troop #520.

To literally top things off, a 16 ft., metal sculpture beautifully overlooks the park location. Danny Jones, artist and owner of Original Ironworks, LLC, was selected to create the art piece, inspired by Indian Creek and elements of local architecture and materials incorporated in the rich history of Caldwell and surrounding communities.

The Indian Creek Musical Art Park was created by an additional grant from Idaho Commission on the Arts and donations from the City of Caldwell, Destination Caldwell and Pacific Steel.

“We are absolutely thrilled this will be part of our downtown,” says Mayor Garret Nancolas. “The park will bring the magic of music and cultural opportunities for families to enjoy.”

The grand opening and ribbon cutting of the Indian Creek Musical Art Park, which coincides with Dia de Los Ninos (Children’s Day), will take place on April 30th (2:00 p.m.) at Arthur Street & 7th Ave. in Caldwell. Families are invited to celebrate the permanent exhibit, sure to be an enjoyable community-gathering place for decades to come.
